 Roy-el Catering will drop off the food at the specified time in disposable containers. Once the food is removed from the transporting hot boxes, the client is responsible to keep food hot (above 140 degrees) or food cold (below 40 degrees). Roy-el Catering will not be liable for food that does not stay within safe serving temperatures. If the food is going to be left out for a period of time, Roy-el suggests the use of chaffers or placing cold food in a pan of ice. Food should never be left in direct sun light. The client is responsible for serving table(s) and any cover(s) for the table, serving utensils, plates, napkins, etc. Disposable serving utensils & chaffers may be purchased from Roy-el Catering for an additional fee. Prior notice must be given on quantities needed.
